TRINITY BELLWOODS DEATH

Man who gave CPR at park raising money for family

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

Mike Lee doesn't know the name of the 30-year-old French man killed by a falling tree limb in Trinity Bellwoods Park.

But he will always remember him.

Lee, one of the bystanders who rushed to give the man CPR, has started an online fundraising campaign for the man's wife, who was with him at the time of the Friday accident and told onlookers she was pregnant.

Lee said he was enjoying a sunny evening at Trinity Bellwoods when he heard a giant cracking sound. "It only took a fraction of a second before the woman jumped up, and you just cannot imagine the sound, her voice," Lee told Metro on Monday.

He started running.

The 36-year-old said he took over doing CPR from another woman, while others clasped the man's hand. Lee said he was the last person to do compressions before the paramedics took over.

Police have not released the couple's names. The French consulate has also declined to release the information, confirming only that the victim was in Canada on a work visa.

"The consulate is following this tragedy and bringing help and support to the family," press secretary Ronan Le Guern said.

Asked how he would get donations to the widow, Lee said a detective has promised to pass along his contact information.

"I just can't get it out of my head that maybe they were talking about their life together, or plans, and to be just snuffed out like that," Lee said. "I just want to do something."

The campaign, running on Crowdrise, had raised $355 as of Monday evening with a goal of $20,000.

TORONTO'S DEADLY STREETS

City pledges more for road safety

Initial plan called 'timid', 'insufficient' in debate

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

A city hall committee has agreed to look for ways to boost the budget for road safety.

Coun. Jaye Robinson, chair of the public works and infrastructure committee, earned unanimous support Monday for adding to the $68.1 million pitched as part of the initial plan last week.

The pledge for "new and enhanced funding" came after five hours of debate that saw several people call the road safety overhaul "timid," "insufficient" and "underwhelming."

Robinson, meanwhile, praised the plan, but added: "I'm not crazy about the budget."

Her motion also asked council to endorse the goal of reducing the number of deaths and serious injuries on Toronto streets to zero over the next five years.

That followed through on a promise she and Mayor John Tory made last week after the original goal — reducing fatalities and serious injuries by 20 per cent by 2026 — was derided as "ridiculous."

The report on additional funding will be delivered before city council votes on the safety plan on July 12.

"I'm hopeful they'll come back with a meaningful change in the funds available," said Maureen Coyle of Walk Toronto, who was among the deputants at the meeting.

If council doesn't commit more money, Coyle said it would demonstrate "they have no appetite for reducing fatalities and serious injuries on our streets."

Nineteen pedestrians have been killed on Toronto streets this year — including three since the road safety plan was introduced June 13. The numbers put the city on track to meet or surpass last year's death tally of 39.

"I find it hard to believe we can't find the funds for this in the budget when we have the money to spend on the Gardiner and those sorts of things," Coyle said. "Don't tell me you can't do it. I won't believe you."

Toronto's "Watch Your Speed" program would be expanded under the new road safety plan. The plan, and a possible increase in money for road safety, will be discussed at council next month. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE

Vision Zero or Zero Vision?

Although Coun. Jaye Robinson's motion to find new money for road safety passed unanimously, the debate was not without its moments.

Coun. Stephen Holyday expressed concern that adding more intersections or stop signs to dangerous roads would lead to more cars stopping and an increase in greenhouse gas emissions.

A deputant from the David Suzuki Foundation pointed out safer streets reduce congestion and pollution by encouraging people to move to alternative transportation like cycling or walking.

Twice during the discussion, Coun. Anthony Peruzza appeared to argue against making streets safer by suggesting more "chaotic" roadways force drivers to pay attention. "Order breeds complacency," the Ward 8 councillor said.

Terrorism, Iran and this little house

STATE-SPONSORED TERROR

North York home key to a controversial court ruling

The tiny house on Sheppard Ave. W. may be vacant and run-down, but the story behind it is replete with terrorism, international intrigue and diplomatic headaches.

An Ontario court found that the building — as well as another empty property in Ottawa and two bank accounts — is owned by the Islamic Republic of Iran.

And last week, a Toronto judge dismissed the country's arguments of state immunity from seizure of property and ordered that the assets be turned over to American victims of Iran-sponsored terrorism who have won cases against Iran in U.S. courts.

The complex case and subsequent ruling comes as the federal government is looking to re-establish diplomatic relations with Tehran that were cut off by the Conservative government in 2012.

It also highlights the little-known fact that federal legislation allows for victims of state-sponsored terrorism from other countries, to ask Canadian courts to seize Iranian assets here if they can prove their case.

The case involves dozens of American victims, their families and estates who had been successful in getting judgments against Iran in U.S. courts, and then applied north of the border to collect some of the damages they claim they're owed.

Iran's Toronto lawyer, Colin Stevenson, said the country intends to appeal.

BIDDERSINGH TRIAL

Stepmother found guilty of murder

A jury has found Elaine Biddersingh guilty of second-degree murder in the death of her stepdaughter, Melonie, whose emaciated remains were found in a burning suitcase north of Toronto more than 20 years ago.

Biddersingh swayed back and forth as the verdict was delivered shortly before 1 p.m. A second-degree murder comes with an automatic sentence of life in prison.

After the verdict was read, Superior Court Justice Ian MacDonnell asked the jurors to make a recommendation on when Biddersingh should be eligible for parole, ranging from 10 to 25 years.

Biddersingh held a Bible to her chest, shaking her head and looking up to the ceiling as MacDonnell spoke.

When MacDonnell told Biddersingh that she would be taken into custody, she smiled at her daughter Charmaine — who Melonie had looked after when she was a baby — and kissed her on the head.

She then went to sit in the prisoner's box as she waited for the jury to return with its parole recommendations.

Of the remaining jurors, four made no recommendation, two said 10 years, two said 15, one said 17 years and one said 20 years.

MacDonnell said a meeting will be held next week to set a date for Biddersingh's sentencing hearing, which will likely be held in September.

Monday's verdict came months after Melonie's father, Everton Biddersingh, was found guilty of first-degree murder in a separate trial, in which Elaine testified as a Crown witness.

Elaine Biddersingh's trial heard that Melonie was 13 when she arrived from Jamaica with her little brother Dwayne and older half-brother Cleon. For three-and-a-half years she was tortured, starved, beaten and controlled by her father and stepmother inside their small high-rise apartment in Parkdale.

The 17-year-old girl's emaciated body was found in a burning suitcase in an industrial parking lot in 1994. She remained unidentified for nearly two decades, until her stepmother suddenly confessed to her pastor in 2011 that Melonie "died like a dog," the court heard. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Healthy lifestyle

The link between sugar consumption and increased body fat has long been known. Too much sugar in the diet promotes more insulin, the fat storing hormone, and thus more body fat.

THE SLIMMING EFFECT OF STABLE BLOOD SUGAR LEVELS

Recently an Italian study of a sugar-blocking supplement showed impressive weight loss results.[1] The supplement, called Zuccarin™, produced on average 20 pounds of weight loss, in only 90 days.

The subjects lost 10% of their body weight and lost 3 times the weight of the control group, who were on a controlled diet, but without a mulberry supplement. In addition, the subjects also experienced healthier blood sugar levels after using this mulberry supplement.

The explanation for the weight loss is that Zuccarin uses natural mulberry leaf extract and chromium to block absorption of sugars in the foods we eat. When these sugars are undigested, our blood sugar stabilizes, and weight loss occurs.

ZUCCARIN MAX™
CHANGED MY LIFE

"I have taken this supplement for 2 years now and can't imagine being without it. I have seen my blood sugar levels stabilize and I have even lost 25 pounds of weight since starting. I have recommended it to a lot of my friends and they are now experiencing the same good results as I have."

LEGISLATION

Owners told to tie up Rover as park security is upped

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

The city is cracking down on park bylaws, increasing the size of its enforcement staff and adding shifts to make sure there's coverage seven days a week.

And one of the biggest targets is dogs allowed to run — or even sit — off their leashes.

Seven additional officers were reallocated from other areas to parks last month bringing the total of people on patrol to 15, city spokeswoman Tammy Robinson said.

They're on the hunt for people violating park bylaws that ban everything from drinking and smoking to launching hot air balloons without a permit.

As for dogs, the city's seen a big increase in the number of complaints about them running off leash, Robinson said.

The city fielded 2,483 complaints about off-leash dogs in 2015 compared to 829 in 2014. Already this year, there have been 611 calls.

It's led to a zero-tolerance approach that has officers handing out tickets as opposed to simple warnings to anyone who leaves Rover to roam.

The blitz has led to 90 tickets so far this year, compared to 39 at the same time last year.

Fines range from $360 for a basic offence and can reach as much as $5,000 if the owner is deemed aggressive or has had several run-ins with bylaw officers, Robinson added.

Mason Small, an Annex dog owner, said she has no problem with the city enforcing the bylaw. But, the real issue is a lack of off-leash parks for dogs, she said.

"There's not enough resources for people with dogs in the city and giving us tickets won't make anybody any happier about that."

DID YOU KNOW?

- Dogs in Toronto must be kept on leashes at all times unless they are on private property and the owner gives consent for them to be there.
- They can also run free in one of the city's 60 off-leash parks.

NATURE

Saviour leaves no insect bee-hind

They were outcasts. Homeless runaways, shunned by their kin in midflight from their native land. About 200 bees, exiled from their hive, buzzed bereft of heart and home near a fire hydrant they mistook for a bee hotel at Yonge and Eglinton last Thursday.

Out foraging and scouting for new real estate the leftover worker clan clung to the sidewalk and waited, hoping for their relatives to come and whisk them away in a return that never came. Enter a saviour. Nima Alizadeh, imbued with the power of social media and a Good Samaritan mindset, responded to posts about the bees on Bunz Trading Zone, a popular Facebook group.

Nima Alizedah
TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"I thought, 'What the hell, I'm going to go try,'" said Alizadeh, 23. The welder, fusing pluckiness and compassion, pulled up to the northwest corner of Yonge St. and Eglinton Ave. W. by bike around 8:30 p.m., cardboard box in hand.

Soon he had all 200 clumped in a corner, as he documented the mission in real time with photo updates on Bunz.

Another Bunz bee buff, Roger Sader, suggested Alizadeh drop them off near his place in Parkdale. Sader had bought a hive of about 40,000 bees for use on his friend's farm north of Vaughan. But he could always use more, so when his nephew spotted the Bunz post, he leapt.

Sader, who hopes to have hives buzzing on his downtown green roof within a year, plans to transport his newest honeycomb kids to the farm Tuesday. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

DEVELOPMENT

Policy would see designers etch their name on new sites

Chris Bateman
For Metro | Toronto

Great works of art carry the artist's signature, and now new Toronto buildings will do the same.

A new policy prepared by city planners will ensure new buildings over 1,000 square metres include a prominent credit to the architect near the main entrance or on the main facade.

"Historically, the laying of the corner stone of a building was very important," said Toon Dreessen, president of the Ontario Association of Architects.

At new city hall, the name of star Finnish architect Viljo Revell is prominently engraved inside the main entrance. CHRIS BATEMAN/FOR METRO.

"We're hoping this initiative continues that tradition."

> There are more and more cities around the world that benefit from architectural tourism.
> MPP Peter Milczyn

The idea of having architects working in Toronto sign their work was first suggested in 2011 by former city councillor Peter Milczyn.

Although the motion was approved by city council, the rules were only implemented sporadically, and only a small number of buildings installed a plaque.

Planners have since agreed to check for an architect credit when reviewing building blueprints and work with the OAA to ensure the designers of buildings know to include the feature.

"It's about ensuring we celebrate design," said Milczyn, who is now the MPP for Etobicoke-Lakeshore.

"There are more and more cities around the world that benefit from architectural tourism. The Bilbao effect," he said, referencing the Spanish city renowned for its architecture.

"If in the City of Toronto we start building a legacy where every building is signed … I think it raises the bar of the discussion of design."

Les Klein, principal of Toronto-based Quadrangle architects and member of the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada, said architects are likely to make better buildings if their names are available for all to see.

"Architecture matters. The way buildings are designed has an impact on the lives of the people who live and work in them," he said.

"If an architect knows his name is going to be on that building in perpetuity, he's not going to settle for anything less than the best he can possibly do."

Pilot program launches yoga for domestic abuse victims

David P. Ball
Metro | Vancouver

Women's anti-violence shelters across British Columbia are poised to offer a unique adaptation of yoga — one based on an understanding of trauma.

The B.C. Society of Transition Houses is rolling out the mat for a pilot project to eventually bring "trauma-informed yoga" to 25 shelters across the province, starting with four initial sites, in hopes that the practice will better support women and children fleeing domestic abuse in healing.

For many women in transition houses across B.C., it will be their first experience of yoga at all, said the executive director of one of the first shelter organizations accepted into the program, Dixon Transition Society in Burnaby.

"I think it's going to be a first time for a lot of the clients," Pany Aghili told Metro. "It's a different kind of yoga, though. It doesn't focus heavily on poses and there's no correction — it's meant to support people to process their thoughts and tap into their inner strength."

Trauma-informed yoga is adapted to not ask participants to imitate a teacher; there are no set poses, instructions to follow, or hands-on posture corrections that could trigger someone with trauma.

> Yoga studios can feel not very accessible for some people.
> Renée Turner

"With interpersonal and domestic violence, a large factor at play is coercion and control," said Sarah Holmes de Castro, Yoga Outreach's programs director and a yoga facilitator. "We're talking about women who may not have had a lot of choice in their lives … so we're offering everyone an invitation to participate as they want."

Yoga Outreach's approach therefore may not even involve a yoga mat, but instead sitting in a chair. And instead of difficult postures, many of the practices are much easier movements or basic meditation exercises.

Fort Mac's never-built highway

Ryan Tumilty
Metro | Edmonton

Metro has learned a second highway out of Fort McMurray that could have sped up the community's massive evacuation from a wildfire in May was announced in 2012, but was never built by the former provincial Progressive Conservative government.

Under then-premier Alison Redford, the Alberta PCs announced $150 million to extend Highway 881 from Anzac to Fort McMurray.

With only one way out, people headed south on Highway 63 during the fire, even as flames burned high in the trees beside the road.

Transportation Minister Brian Mason said the previous government announced the plan but did little to turn it into a reality.

"They never put it in the capital plan," he said. "Many things were announced and then later on quietly removed."

But while Mason is critical of the government for announcing, but not funding the road, he has no immediate plans to change that.

Mason said the government would look at secondary routes out of the city, but could make no commitments.

Interim Progressive Conservative leader Ric McIver, who was transportation minister at the time, said the government had other priorities and couldn't follow through.

Donations less strict for gay men

Health Canada is making it easier for gay men to give blood, so long as they have been celibate for one year.

Canadian Blood Services and Hema-Quebec will now be allowed to accept blood from men who have had sex with men as recently as one year ago.

"It's certainly a step in the right direction," Health Minister Jane Philpott said Monday.

"There is an incredible desire and certainly a commitment on the part of our government to work towards further decreasing that donor deferral period. We will be actually looking for mechanisms to be able to support that.

"The desire is to be able to have those deferrals based on behaviour as opposed to sexual orientation."

Health Canada is also giving the blood donation agencies $3 million to support that potential goal, she added. "We will putting part of that towards research on behaviour-based donor deferral programs."

Health Canada said the change comes after Canadian Blood Services and Hema-Quebec provided scientific data that the change would not compromise safety.

Trudeau calls attack 'cowardly'

A suicide bomber killed 14 Nepalese security guards who were on their way to work at the Canadian Embassy in Kabul on Monday.

The Canadian Embassy in Kabul confirmed what it called a "cowardly attack" on its security company, but noted that there had been no attack on its embassy premises.

The bombing was also condemned by Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

"Today's attack on security workers in Kabul is appalling and cowardly," he tweeted.

The bomber was on foot when he struck the minibus carrying the guards, said Gen. Abdul Rahman Rahimi. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Syrian boy gifts immigration minister with a painted portrait

Federal politicians meet a lot of people, but Syrian children don't meet a lot of federal politicians — let alone the same one twice, in two different countries, each a world apart from the other.

Hamza Ali, 13, remembers clearly the day last November when a trio of Canadian cabinet ministers trooped into an ad-hoc art gallery set up in the Zaatari refugee camp in Jordan.

Ali, one of the artists, shook the ministers' hands and explained the concept behind his gripping paintings of women and men struggling with life and the war in Syria.

Immigration Minister John McCallum told Ali he was struck by the symbolism of a painting showing a woman carrying a map of Syria on her back up a flight of stairs, a heavy red sky in the background.

"Women do all the heavy lifting," McCallum remarked.

That painting now hangs in Health Minister Jane Philpott's office in Ottawa. McCallum didn't have one — until Monday.

The ministers left the camp and went on to open a massive refugee processing centre near Amman that would eventually see thousands of refugees interviewed and screened to come to Canada.

Five of them ended up being the Ali family.

Since February, they've lived in the national capital — Hamza utterly oblivious to the fact his painting was hanging in a high-powered government office just a few minutes away.

When his family was invited Monday to an event in Ottawa to mark World Refugee Day, he and his father decided to paint another.

The idea, they said through a translator, was to offer a thank you to the minister who may not have bought one of the paintings but — unbeknownst to the minister — had given them the gift of a new life in Canada.

When McCallum arrived at the event, he was guided over to the Alis.

He nodded when he was told he'd met them before, but then Ali's mother reminded him her son had been the boy with the paintings in the camp. McCallum's face lit up — and his smile grew even wider when Ali's father pulled a new painting out of a paper bag.

It was a portrait of the minister, a Canadian flag behind him and the words "thank you very much" across the top.

Massacre can't stop gridlock

A divided Senate blocked rival election-year plans to curb guns on Monday, eight days after the horror of Orlando's mass shooting intensified pressure on lawmakers to act but knotted them in gridlock anyway — even over restricting firearms for terrorists.

Meanwhile, Orlando gunman Omar Mateen identified himself as an Islamic soldier in calls with authorities during his rampage and demanded to a crisis negotiator that the U.S. "stop bombing Syria and Iraq," according to transcripts released by the FBI on Monday.

Planning a budget can really pay off

You're used to winging it — even when it comes to your money. But a little organizing can go a long way to helping you stay on top of your finances, manage your debts and build your savings. And it's easier than you might think. Here are some tips to get on the right track.

File your incoming bills in one readily accessible folder in order of due date. Book a regular date in your calendar to review and pay them, preferably at the same time and day every week or two. Store your sales receipts and ATM slips in a separate folder and check them against paper statements when you pay your bills.

Going digital is particularly convenient for the organizationally averse — it's banking done fast, with no fuss. You can pay your bills automatically by setting up pre-authorized debits for ongoing bills — hydro, heat, cellphone, etc. You can check accounts online to keep track of payments and balances. And you can track your bill statements to confirm accuracy, verifying amounts and due dates.

Not many of us would characterize tracking our personal finances as "fun." To make it less daunting, approach these projects like the pros: break them down into small, manageable tasks and tackle them regularly by logging times in your calendar as reminders. And motivate yourself to do them on time by rewarding yourself upon completion.

By entering your information — including daily living costs, transportation and debt repayment — you'll soon see where the bucks go. You can then determine where your budget needs tweaking.

We all have goals for our savings — whether it's a family vacation, a down payment or a major purchase such as a car. And reaching them takes a plan. Check out online savings calculators that determine how much money you'll need to set aside to meet your (non-retirement) financial goal — and how long it'll take to get there.

Donald Trump's team gets a shakeup

U.S. ELECTION

Fired campaign manager says he leaves with 'no regrets'

Donald Trump abruptly fired campaign manager Corey Lewandowski on Monday in a dramatic shakeup designed to calm panicked Republican leaders and end an internal power struggle plaguing the billionaire businessman's unconventional White House bid.

In dismissing his longtime campaign chief — just a month before the party's national convention, Trump signalled, at least for a day, a departure from the seat-of-the-pants style that has fueled his unlikely rise in Republican politics. Perhaps more than anyone else in Trump's inner circle, the ousted aide has preached a simple mantra: "Let Trump be Trump."

"I have no regrets," Lewandowski told CNN, just hours after he was escorted out of Trump's Manhattan campaign headquarters. Still, the former conservative activist seemed to acknowledge the limitations of his approach, which has sparked widespread concern among the GOP's top donors, operatives, elected officials, and even some of Trump's family members.

"The campaign needs to continue to grow to be successful," he said.

Trump, the presumptive GOP presidential nominee, did not address the move publicly on Monday. Spokeswoman Hope Hicks described the departure merely as a "parting of ways."

A person close to Trump said Lewandowski was forced out largely because of the campaign's worsening relationship with the Republican National Committee, donors and GOP officials. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Man who tried grabbing gun wanted to kill Trump

A man arrested at a Donald Trump rally in Las Vegas told authorities he tried to grab an officer's gun so he could kill the candidate, the Secret Service said.

A complaint filed Monday in U.S. District Court in Nevada charges Michael Steven Sandford with an act of violence on restricted grounds.

UNITED KINGDOM

British lawmakers mourn slain Jo Cox

The raucous business of Britain's House of Commons was replaced by sombre silence and heartfelt tributes Monday for slain lawmaker Jo Cox, while the man charged with her slaying made a brief appearance in court by video link from prison.

Lawmakers lined the benches and stood in the aisles of the House for a special session in Cox's memory. Some wiped away tears, and each wore a white rose, symbol of Cox's home county of Yorkshire.

Parliament was in recess for campaigning in the European Union referendum when Cox was shot and stabbed to death outside a library in her northern England constituency on Thursday. The suspect, Thomas Mair, gave his name during a court appearance as "death to traitors, freedom for Britain."

The killing — the first of a sitting British legislator in more than a quarter of a century — prompted an outpouring of shock and grief, and brought a three-day halt to campaigning for this week's referendum.

"An attack like this strikes not only at an individual, but at our freedom," said Speaker John Bercow, who recalled the House from recess to allow lawmakers to honour their colleague.

Jo Cox GETTY IMAGES

"That is why we assemble here, both to honour Jo and to redouble our dedication to democracy."

Cox was a former aid worker and Labour legislator who had championed the plight of Syrian refugees and strongly backed a "remain" vote in Thursday's EU poll.

Her death brought promises to tone down the often vitriolic political rhetoric of the referendum campaign, which has exposed bitter divisions about immigration and national identity in Britain. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Proposal seeks stiff fines for short-term rental ads

Supporters of Airbnb hold a rally outside City Hall in New York in January 2015. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A proposal to outlaw online advertisements for short-term New York City apartment rentals on sites like Airbnb has cleared the state Legislature.

It's already illegal to rent out apartments for less than 30 days in the city.

The measure heading to Democratic Gov. Andrew Cuomo's desk would establish graduated fines of up to $7,500 US for advertising online or elsewhere for short-term rentals, which have expanded with online platforms.

"Airbnb has created a black market for illegal hotel operators," said Assemblywoman Linda Rosenthal, a Manhattan Democrat and bill sponsor. The practice reduces affordable housing for city residents, she said.

Josh Meltzer, Airbnb head of public policy, said lawmakers "cut a last-minute deal with the hotel industry" to pass the bill. He called it "a bad proposal that will make it harder for thousands of New Yorkers to pay the bills."

The penalties range from up to $1,000 US for a first offence, $5,000 US for the second and $7,500 US for the third.

Existing law prohibits owners or renters of apartments in multiunit buildings from renting them for less than 30 days unless they remain present. It permits having boarders or renting rooms.

Airbnb's analysis shows some 24,400 city hosts have made rentals.

"This is a bad bill driven by the hotel industry that will actually exacerbate the affordable-housing crisis," said Airbnb spokesman Peter Schottenfels.

> "This is a bad bill driven by the hotel industry."
> Peter Schottenfels, Airbnb spokesman

State Attorney General Eric Schneiderman, who investigated Airbnb rentals from 2010 to 2014, called the bill's passage "a positive step" needed if Airbnb can't police itself. His office found 72 per cent of the units in the city were illegal, with commercial operators constituting 6 per cent of the hosts and supplying 36 per cent of the rentals, he said.

Airbnb said in late 2014 that it had removed more than 2,000 of the New York listings that violated state or city laws.

Sen. Andrew Lanza, a Staten Island Republican and bill sponsor, said it's aimed at those who run illegal hotels in residential areas and doesn't target homeowners or interfere with property rights.

STATISTICS CANADA

Shadow economy tag: $45B

Statistics Canada says the underground economy totalled $45.6 billion in Canada in 2013, or about 2.4 per cent of gross domestic product.

The federal agency says more than half of the total can be attributed to three industries.

The largest, residential construction, accounted for 27.8 per cent, while retail trade accounted for 12.5 per cent and accommodation and food services 11.7 per cent.

Overall, underground activities related to household spending amounted to $2,156 per household in 2013.

Statistics Canada added that the underground economy as a proportion of GDP was relatively stable in every province and territory in 2013.

The agency defined the underground economy as economic activities, whether legal or illegal, that escaped measurement because of their hidden, illegal or informal nature. It excluded activities such as illegal drugs and prostitution.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Ministers reach agreement

Most of Canada's finance ministers reached an agreement in principle Monday to revamp the Canada Pension Plan, although Quebec and Manitoba have not signed on to the deal.

Under the agreement, which would go into effect in 2019, contributions for a typical worker earning about $55,000 would initially increase by $7 a month and employers would match those contributions.

The plan would be phased in over seven years until 2025 and it means when people retire their maximum annual benefits would increase by about one-third to $17,478.

Finance Minister Bill Morneau said they're going to improve the pension plan in a way that will make a difference to working Canadians.

Ontario Finance Minister Charles Sousa said after the meeting that what they achieved Monday was for Canada's youth. "Today, this federal government has shown great leadership and great desire to do something of great benefit for our young people."

Sousa said the plan would replace the one his government had been working on.

British Columbia Finance Minister Mike de Jong said the plan is affordable for employees. "I think we have reached a balanced approach to setting the objectives."

A change to the CPP needs the consent of Ottawa and a minimum of seven provinces representing at least two-thirds of the country's population.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
ON RACHEL NOTLEY'S GOLF-COURSE TREATMENT

Just as a cake recipe must be adjusted depending on altitude, critiques of women politicians, however innocuous, must account for the temperature of misogyny.

Grown men will be boys, as the saying goes.

So when the Big Country Oilmen's Association took an image of Alberta premier Rachel Notley's face and used it for target practice at their weekend golf tournament — well, "everybody had a good laugh," Ernest Bothi, the association's president, told media.

"It was good-hearted laughter," he clarified.

Perhaps he missed the Facebook video of a golf cart careening towards Notley's face and bowling it over, amid a soundtrack of unfriendly glee. "Good-hearted" also wasn't exactly the impression he left in the press. Bothi was "fed up" with the oil economy and frustrated at government, he told the CBC. "A lot of good people have invested their entire life into this industry and for what? So that a government can strip it away from us?" he said.

When asked if he was sorry, he countered with: "For what? For being frustrated? For possibly losing my home and possibly losing my business because of this government? No."

And there you hear real anger that inspired this "good-natured" golf gag.

Bothi later did apologize, after the story picked up steam and he learned British MP Jo Cox was murdered last week. His "timing was poor" and had he known, there would have been no Notley cameo at the tournament.

In making such a declaration, Bothi suggests he believes there's a link between symbolic, even joking, violence against women and actual violence against women, even if it only amounts to poor taste. But you can't have it both ways, sir.

Yes, sexism and violence against women are entwined, and that's why effigies of Rob Ford and Stephen Harper and Ralph Klein never made quite the headlines of the Notley prank. Bothi wasn't applying his judgment to the wider context, as we should. Just as a cake recipe must be adjusted depending on altitude, critiques of women politicians, however innocuous, must account for the temperature of misogyny.

But neither was the feminist outrage well measured. In the comment sections, the only people holier than the ones crying sexism were the ones seemingly blaming the newly empowered NDP for all but original sin.

In truth, at least according to Facebook (Bothi didn't respond to an interview request), anger — not good-naturedness and not sexism — seems to be at the root of the whole thing. Bothi's feed is populated by comments thick with personal jabs, sweeping criticisms and little nuance.

Albertans are a "gullible electorate" and Alison Redford is an "arrogant, lying, pork barrelling pig of a premier," a "Marie Antonette" (sic) whose party will hopefully show "the politically guillotine and cuter her bitumen bubblehead off."

Also, the Toronto media is "corrupt" for publishing Rob Ford's crack video, "most of the Libs and NDP's" on Parliament Hill are criminals and Justin Trudeau is a "pretty boy" and an "airhead."

This week, to the media, Bothi took a decidedly more measured tone. "I'm sure she's a wonderful person to sit and drink coffee with, but I just wish she'd have a change of heart on what she's doing, especially with this carbon tax," he said of Notley.

Likewise, I'm sure Bothi might be a nice enough man to have a beer with, and while I sympathize with the fear he and many oil workers must be feeling, I wish he'd have a change of heart on how he's behaving, especially with all this vitriol stuff.

The feminist outrage was not well measured. The only ones holier than those crying sexism were those blaming the NDP for all but original sin.

Loving LeBron?

LeBron James has finally brought an NBA championship to Cleveland. In light of the historic win over the mighty Golden State Warriors — the city's first title in a major pro sport since 1964 — we asked what you think of King James's victory.

1 Were you glad or mad to see LeBron and his Cavs rally to win the NBA title?

- LBJ was the best player in this finals and last years as well You don't have to like him, but what he can do is undeniable.
- Not just his game, but his life was put under a microscope to overcome all the adversity is what greatness is made of.

- I was angry because of the way he's played...dropping to the court if anyone brushed against him.

Challenge to Tory: Stop favouring Gardiner

TORY'S TORONTO
Matt Elliott

It wasn't a good look.

After botching the launch of the city's road safety plan and during a week in which pedestrians and cyclists continued to get mowed down on Toronto's deadly streets, Mayor John Tory decided to spend some time last Wednesday delivering a press conference in front of his old pal the Gardiner Expressway.

He had great news for motorists, he said. Thanks to the city's previously-announced decision to spend another $3.4 million to speed up repairs, all lanes of the Gardiner will reopen this week — well ahead of schedule.

It was more of the same from Tory. Since he took office, he's treated the city's lakeside expressway like a favoured child. It gets extra allowance, ice cream after dinner and never has to hear the word "no."

The Gardiner got a $400-million boost in Tory's first budget to pay for rehab. Then, despite pleas from city planners, Tory decided to accept the billion-dollar cost premium to maintain the Gardiner East.

No expense has been too big.

Meanwhile, initiatives for pedestrians and cyclists have been subject to typical Tory hand-wringing.

The city's 10-year bike plan, already scaled back from its most ambitious funding levels, was stripped of corridor studies that would have looked at bike lanes on major streets.

Then the road safety plan became a confusing mess. At launch, instead of building a strategy toward what advocates call Vision Zero — a target of zero deaths on Toronto streets — the $68.1-million plan instead suggesting working toward a pathetic target of reducing deaths by 20 per cent by 2026.

Tory later clarified things, pledging his support for a Vision Zero target. But he also said there would be no additional funding for road safety beyond what was laid out in the report. I'm not sure how that math works.

With the Gardiner, the math has always been simple. If money is needed, the mayor will be there.

While Metro on Monday lauded Tory for his endorsement of Vision Zero, I remain a skeptic. I'm not convinced the mayor will provide the resources needed to get us there.

But I'd love to be wrong. In fact, I'm going to challenge Tory to prove me wrong.

As a start, I challenge the mayor to commit to at least one pedestrian or cyclist project with the same zeal with which he's supported spending gonzo cash on the Gardiner.

I'm not asking for too much. The transformation of King Street to a pedestrian- and transit-focused corridor might be a good place to start.

But whatever the project, I'm defying Toronto's mayor to show the same kind of enthusiasm and willingness to invest for pedestrians and cyclists that he's shown for the city's motorists.

He needs to show this city that his priorities aren't as skewed as they often look.

Zika puts a damper on destination weddings

Sarah Jawad and her husband Moufid Jarjour cancelled their wedding in Mexico because of Zika fears. CONTRIBUTED

GUIDE

What you need to know ahead of your nuptials in faraway lands

Megan Haynes
For Metro Canada

Sarah Jawad's wedding almost turned into a $200,000 nightmare. Right after she mailed invitations to her Cancun nuptials, the Calgary resident started receiving concerned messages from attendees.

Zika had arrived on the Mexican shores.

The virus, which is spread through mosquitoes, can cause serious birth defects among pregnant women, and as a result is having a negative effect on everything from weddings, honeymoons and babymoons.

Much remains unknown about the virus, so women wishing to start families are being told to wait up to 10 weeks before trying to conceive. In Canada, only those who show symptoms can be tested, which leaves a lot of uncertainty for couples in limbo.

"I didn't want to put any of our loved ones at risk," says Jawad.

"If I were to find out one of them had a child with a birth defect (because) of Zika, I wouldn't be able to forgive myself."

Jawad and her fiance worked with their travel agent to try and bake in some protection for the wedding party to be able to cancel on short notice, should the spread of the virus worsen.

When neither the agent nor resort were able to offer a guarantee that her 80-plus guest list could get some sort of refund on their $2,000 per person trip should the situation worsen, the pair cancelled their dream wedding.

"That's almost $200,000 we and our guests (were) investing in our wedding," she says.

"But we were so frustrated by the generic answers we were getting, we didn't feel protected."

In the end, with only five months to go, Jawal changed their venue to Vancouver and started planning from scratch.

Thankfully, none of her guests had put in their deposits, and through negotiating she and her fiancé were able to recoup their funds for the wedding.

With more than 350 cases of confirmed Zika in Mexico, both the Canadian government and American Centre for Disease Control advise caution, recommending pregnant women and women who want to become pregnant avoid travel to the country at all and for everyone else, using mosquito spray liberally and covering up when outside, which Jawad says reinforces her decision to cancel.

Crystal Adair-Benning, owner of destination wedding firm Distinct Occasions, says while none of her clients have cancelled, the Zika scare is changing the discussion for many in the planning stages of their weddings. Hawaii, which so far remains Zika free, has become a lot more popular in recent months, she says.

For anyone who has booked (both bridal party and guests), they may only have their insurance to fall back on if the spread of Zika worsen, she adds.

Even then, most insurance will only cover the funds for the pregnant party's travel cost.

If the bride and groom cancel or make changes, insurance won't usually cover guests' costs.

Those who opt to move forward with their weddings in Zika zones, Adair-Benning recommends including bug spray and information guides in welcome kits, and making sure as much information is available to guests ahead of the big day.

While there is no social obligation on the bride and groom to refund their guests, there are some things to consider says etiquette expert Julie Blais Comeau.

Time is of the essence: as soon as a decision is made, guests have to be notified. For longer-leads (and when the invitation hasn't been sent out) a simple note saying the wedding has been postponed will do.

Couples are encouraged to disclose the reason ("Due to health risks associated with the Zika virus, we're making changes to our wedding plans,") though they don't have to tell people they're pregnant or starting a family, she says — that's up to the discretion (and comfort level) of the bride.

The closer you get to a wedding date, the more important phone calls become, providing as much detail as possible around the changes, she says.

In the event of a cancellation of the entire wedding, all presents (from the engagement to the bridal shower to the wedding itself) are to be returned — no exceptions, she says. Above all, however, Blais Comeau preaches understanding: "Yes, (guests) may have incurred some costs, but be patient," she says.

"It can't be easy to cancel a wedding for whatever reason."

Yelchin SUV was part of recall

The SUV that rolled down a driveway and killed Star Trek actor Anton Yelchin was being recalled because the gear shifters have confused drivers, causing the vehicles to roll away unexpectedly, government records show.

Yelchin, 27, a rising actor best known for playing Chekov in the rebooted series, died Sunday after his 2015 Jeep Grand Cherokee pinned him against a mailbox pillar and security fence at his home, Los Angeles police said.

The 2015 model-year Grand Cherokees were part of a global recall of 1.1 million vehicles announced by Fiat Chrysler in April, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration records show. The recall was urged after complaints from drivers who had trouble telling if they had put the automatic transmissions in park. If they were not in park and a driver left the vehicle, it could roll away.

Fiat Chrysler, which makes Jeeps, said in a statement Monday that it was investigating and it was premature to speculate on the cause of the crash. It offered sympathies to Yelchin's friends and family.

Investigators were looking into the position of Yelchin's gear shift at the time of the accident, Officer Jane Kim said. The actor had gotten out of the vehicle momentarily, but police didn't say why he was behind it when it started rolling.

Yelchin's friends found him after he failed to show up for an audition early Sunday.

Coroner's officials ruled Yelchin's death an accident after an autopsy. The results of any toxicology tests would not be known for months, coroner spokesman Ed Winter said.

Yelchin's death tragically cut short the promising career of an actor whom audiences were still getting to know and who had great artistic ambition. Star Trek Beyond, the third film in the series, comes out in July.

Director J.J. Abrams, who cast Yelchin in the franchise, wrote that he was "brilliant ... kind, and supremely talented." His death was felt throughout the industry.

"What a rare and beautiful soul with his unstoppable passion for life," said Jodie Foster, whose 2011 film The Beaver co-starred Yelchin. "He was equal parts serious thinker and the most fun little brother you could ever dream of."

"He was a ferocious movie buff who put us all to shame," said Gabe Klinger, who directed Yelchin in the upcoming film Porto, likely to be released this fall. "He was watching four or five movies every night."

Yelchin began acting as a child, taking small roles in independent films and various television shows, such as ER, The Practice, and Curb Your Enthusiasm. His breakout big-screen role came opposite Anthony Hopkins in 2001's Hearts in Atlantis.

JOHANNA SCHNELLER WHAT I'M WATCHING

Comedy that's frisky, female — and funny

THE SHOW: Baroness von Sketch Show, Season 1, Episode 2
THE MOMENT: The nude locker room

Baroness von Sketch Show takes us to places that we don't normally go. THE CANADIAN PRESS/HANDOUT

"Happy 40th birthday!" a gym attendant greets a patron. The attendant leads the patron past her usual locker to a special room, filled with women of all shapes: stark naked. "I'm not comfortable with that much nudity!" the patron protests. "Aren't you?" the attendant asks. The patron looks down. Her clothes have disappeared. "I am!" she cries. "But how?"

"Welcome to your 40s," the attendant says. "Welcome to not giving a s— at the gym."

The other women cluster around, greeting her. "In five years you'll be giving unsolicited life advice to perfect strangers," one says.

"The mental space that's freed up by not giving a s—, it's delicious," says another.

"Modesty is for them," a woman says, gesturing to two 20-somethings in towels. "You're in a better space now."

Is there such a thing as gender in comedy? Should there be? The four comedians who write and headline this series — Carolyn Taylor, Meredith MacNeill, Aurora Browne and Jennifer Whalen — aren't doing bits only for women or that only women can get.

But they do take us into places we don't typically go and explore them from points of view (women in a boardroom) we don't normally hear. Is that because they're women? I think so. Sue me.

The only question that ultimately matters, however, is the easiest one to answer: Is this show funny? Very.

Baroness von Sketch Show airs Tuesdays, 9:30 p.m. on CBC.

Johanna Schneller is a media connoisseur who zeroes in on pop-culture moments. She appears Monday through Thursday.

School's ode to Hamilton runs afoul of Copyright Act

Genna Buck
Metro Canada

Lawyer Bill Northcote has a message for the high school students and teachers in Scarborough, Ont. who staged three numbers from the hit Broadway musical Hamilton, only to have them removed from YouTube:

Be willing to wait for it.

The musical — a hip-hop retelling of the life of founding father Alexander Hamilton — is not yet licensed for amateurs.

Reproducing it is infringement under the Copyright Act, said Northcote, chair of business law at Shibley Righton LLP in Toronto.

And it doesn't matter that the play is American. The rules are essentially the same.

The singing, rapping and dancing chops of students from Wexford Collegiate School for the Arts earned accolades from around the Internet before the videos were taken down at the request of Hamilton's PR rep Thursday.

Although a takedown request or cease-and-desist letter usually does the trick in cases like this, the copyright owners could be within their rights to get a court order preventing the school from performing Hamilton any more and could seek damages (monetary compensation) for its unauthorized use, Northcote said.

Students at Wexford Collegiate School for the Arts in Scarborough, Ont., perform a musical number from the Tony-winning Broadway hit Hamilton earlier this month. After posting three numbers from the musical on YouTube, they were issued a take-down request from the Hamilton PR team. MICHAEL ROBINSON

That is, unless the Wexford kids could successfully argue they qualify for an exception.

One way would be through fair dealing: Copyrighted works may be used for research, private study, education, parody or satire.

Just how much copying is fair is defined case-by-case. Even a cover of a single song can be infringement, and "reproduction of the whole work is certainly not fair," in the case of a musical, Northcote said.

There's also a special exception for performances at schools.

But the show has to be primarily by students, for an audience of mainly students and teachers, on school property and not put on for profit. That's why lip-syncing to the Spice Girls at your school talent show is OK.

But Wexford students performed for the media and posted recordings to YouTube.

The more people see a grifted work, the higher the damages could be, Northcote explained. Their rendition of the song Right Hand Man had 21,000 views.

This was the students' and teachers' "love letter" to Hamilton, the school's artistic director Ann Merriam told Torstar News Service. They wanted to catch the attention of its cast.

But they hoped it would be in a positive way.

Lin-Manuel Miranda, who wrote Hamilton and stars in the title role, often applauds and shares covers and tributes on social media, and says he's read all the Hamilton fan fiction online, from "the cuddliest to the filthiest."

That's not the same as waiving intellectual property rights, Northcote explained, but could encourage "a false sense of comfort that he won't mind."

It's reasonable to hold off on allowing amateur productions, he added, especially while Hamilton is still booming on Broadway. It's part of the creators' rights to cash in on the time and effort they put into making it.

U.S. and international tours of Hamilton are planned into 2018 and beyond. So it will likely be years before it's heard at high schools. Current secondary students — young, scrappy, hungry and Hamilton-crazy as they are — may not get their shot at it. WITH FILES FROM TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

PRICEY PROSPECT

The cost of reproductions

Staging a play at school can get pricey. For example, Hamilton composer Lin-Manuel Miranda's 2008 musical In the Heights would cost $1,700 to stage if the school wanted to do three shows for an audience of 150 at a ticket price of $10. That's according to R&H Theatricals, which licenses the musical to amateurs.

GROUP B In Toulouse

3 0

Wales advanced to the European Championship's knockout stages as group winner after comprehensively beating Russia 3-0 on Monday.

Goals from Aaron Ramsey, Neil Taylor and Gareth Bale, his third in consecutive games at Euro 2016, ensured that Wales won Group B ahead of England, which could only draw 0-0 with Slovakia.

Ramsey opened the scoring in the 11th minute after a quick counterattack, chipping the ball over the advancing goalkeeper. Taylor doubled the advantage nine minutes later after slotting in a rebound, his first international goal.

Bale then made it 3-0 in the 67th minute with an audacious shot that makes him the tournament's leading scorer.

"It's probably the best performance I've been involved in with Wales," said Bale. "To top the group, what more can you ask? We said we didn't want to make the numbers up. Well, we can't do any more than win the group."

For Russia, defeat meant its time at Euro 2016 is over and coach Leonid Slutsky gave a major hint that he won't be the man in charge for much longer. The team, which only earned one point in a disappointing campaign, will now focus on the World Cup, which it is hosting in two years.

"I think after a type of tournament like this, you need someone else to take charge of the national side for major competitions," Slutsky said after the match.

Russia, which needed to win the match to have any chance of progressing, took a more attacking posture at the Stadium de Toulouse. But its attacking forays left space for Wales to strike on the counterattack.

Welsh supporters, in a sea of red around the Stadium de Toulouse, chanted "Don't take us home! Please don't take us home!" during the match. But as the match went on, they confidently chanted "We are top of the league" and now look forward to an encounter in the knockout phase.

OUTSIDERS
The tournament is Wales' first major competition since the 1958 World Cup.

"Overall it was a fantastic performance and we topped the group, which no one would have seen coming," Ramsey said. "Now that we're through we want to see how far we can go," Ramsey said. "Anything can happen in the next matches."

Voyageurs Cup a top priority for TFC

The Amway Canadian Championship can get lost amid a busy Major League Soccer season, Greg Vanney says.

But the Toronto FC coach has the Canadian derby pencilled in at the top of his priority list for a number of reasons.

Toronto hosts the Vancouver Whitecaps on Tuesday in the opening leg of the two-game championship final. The series winner will hoist the Voyageurs Cup and earn a spot in the 2017-18 CONCACAF Champions League.

Greg Vanney
TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"It's very important," Vanney said Monday. "Just for our group, winning a championship is obviously one of the major goals. Also for our group, there's ambition to play an international sort of competition.

"And obviously too we want to establish ourselves as the best team in Canada. That's another little piece of that obviously, and I think the Canadian championship is another one of those traditions that you want to try to hold onto and win and really set your foot down."

Toronto defeated the Montreal Impact 4-2 on aggregate to advance, while Vancouver rallied to knock off Ottawa Fury FC 3-2 on aggregate. The series heads to Vancouver for the second leg on June 29.

The defending champion Whitecaps have no plans of giving up the cup.

"It's a Cup match and we have this trophy," said Vancouver midfielder Russell Teibert. "We remember all the great feelings that we had that came with winning. We want to replicate that this year." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada names its 18-woman roster

Christine Sinclair leads a young Canadian soccer squad for the Rio Olympics.

It will be the third Olympics for Sinclair, who captained Canada to a memorable bronze in the 2012 Games on London.

Goalkeeper Sabrina D'Angelo makes the squad despite being sidelined recently with a fractured wrist. But there is no place for Gabrielle Carle, who has been out with a high ankle sprain of late.

The 18-woman roster has a combined 1,295 caps with 978 of those belonging to Sinclair (243), Diana Matheson (183), Rhian Wilkinson (175) and Sophie Schmidt (149). THE CANADIAN PRESS

Buds make deal with Ducks for netminder

The Toronto Maple Leafs took a big swing at solving the future of their crease Monday.

The Leafs dealt for Danish goaltender Frederik Andersen, landing the 26-year-old from the Anaheim Ducks in exchange for the 30th overall selection in the upcoming NHL draft as well as a second-round selection in 2017.

Toronto then agreed to terms on a new contract with Andersen, due to be a restricted free agent on July 1, inking him to a five-year deal.

Numbers favour Jays' 4-to-1 approach

MLB

So far, quantity of arms has led to higher quality

In explaining why the Blue Jays never made an offer to David Price this off-season, team president Mark Shapiro was blunt. "We had multiple holes to fill," he said, adding that the team could not afford to commit what it would take to sign Price.

"David Price would've represented almost our entire off-season," he added in a separate interview.

It was a sensible explanation, if decidedly unsexy.

Price, of course, went to the Boston Red Sox, who signed him to a record seven-year, $217-million deal, which pays him $30 million this season.

The Jays spent $30 million on their pitching staff last off-season, but they spread the money around: Marco Estrada, who is earning $10.5 million in 2016 and $26 million over two-years; J.A. Happ, who was signed at three-years, $36-million; Jesse Chavez, who was acquired via trade from the Oakland and awarded $4 million in arbitration; and Gavin Floyd, who was signed to a one-year, $1-million deal.

Looking at the average annual value of the Estrada and Happ deals, the combined salaries of the four pitchers neatly adds up to exactly $30 million.

So how does Price's performance so far compare with the pitchers the Jays paid instead?

INNINGS PITCHED

Price: 99-2/3

Jays' four: 233-1/3

Price leads the AL this season with 99-2/3 frames pitched but he has little chance in this comparison. The Jays' foursome — two starters, two relievers — has combined for 233-1/3 innings, or 2.3 times Price's output. EDGE: Jays

David Price

VS.

Marco Estrada

J.A. Happ

Jesse Chavez

Gavin Floyd

QUALITY OF INNINGS

Price: 4.24 ERA

Jays' four: 3.32 ERA

By most measures, Estrada alone has been a better pitcher than Price, who was not good in his first month. Estrada has held hitters to an MLB-best .168 batting average and allowed 1.7 fewer earned runs per nine innings. Happ has averaged almost as many innings per start and allowed roughly the same number of baserunners, but Price has a much higher strikeout rate. Chavez has settled in nicely after a tough start, while Floyd is trending in the opposite direction. EDGE: Jays, but expect Price to close the gap.

OVERALL CONTRIBUTIONS

Price: 1.8 fWAR.

Jays' four: 2.7 fWAR

You would think there would be a bigger disparity here, but Price is handsomely rewarded in the Wins Above Replacement formula for his strikeout rate. If we look at Win Probability Added, a metric that calculates individual contributions to a team's chances of winning and then credits or debits players accordingly, the comparison is starker. Estrada sits third in the AL with a 1.87 WPA and Price is sitting at 0.0, since he did more to hurt the Red Sox chances of winning in five of his first dozen starts. EDGE: Jays

WHAT'S THE PAYOFF?

So far, the Jays' decision to spread their dollars looks like the shrewder move. But if the Red Sox end up in a one-game playoff and Price throws a complete-game shutout, all the rational number-crunching will be moot.
